Japan Lilies.

LILIUM AURATUM!

This splendid Queen of Lilies will soon be in bloom and will add the finishing touch to the decoration of the parlor or sitting room it is unrivalled. The whole English, Floral world, on this direction, was ransacked for the choicest bulbs; its extent has no limit; since the discovery of this first magnificent bulb, which has created such a sensation in every city, both in European and American gardens, it would have been impossible to obtain them in quantities such as would have been desirable, but for the fact that I have a relative living in Japan, who has sent me a large consignment of this splendid bulb, which he has collected in the mountains of Japan, and which I am now offering to the public at the following unprecedented low prices:

Extra flowering bulbs of the above, 50 cts.
Lilium Album, pure white, 15 cts each.
Lilium Roseum, pink, 15 cts each.
Lilium Rubrum (in sun or shade), 15 cts each.

Sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price, or at the prices quoted.

EUROPEAN LETTERS.

Trip to East London Docks.

We are now to complete our pleasant journey from the centre to the extremity of the metropolis.

In my last communication, we had gone down Cheapside, and were just emerging upon a little open space, on the right, in the immediate neighborhood of which a number of world renowned buildings, and on the left, stand some of the most ancient edifices, ever erected on British soil.

At our right, for example, stands the Mansion House, the official residence of the Lord Mayor of London, a building of very large proportions in a most comfortable habitation, but not to be compared with the palaces pertaining to the office of Chief Magistrate of the central city of the British empire. The scale of the great building, formed with its mass of lofty Corinthian pillars, is quite imposing, but the edifice as a whole, reminds me of nothing so much as a huge tea chest, and deserves a good deal of censure. Old as it is, (it was finished in 1753) the cost of the whole work fell but little short of $2,000,000, at that time, when money was worth nearly twice as much as it is to-day, and such a sum, instead of making it, would be considered more directly powerful.—But Cheapside, of the English Government and all human interests. They all have monuments, and different styles are always bringing to mind into communication with these lords of the world's life. England governs Europe; Lombard Street governs England; but London governs Downing, and thus it is seen that the little narrow thoroughfare, on which we are now standing, that little progress we are making in the hurrying and pushing crowds, great, solemn, only Europe, but the world.

The buildings along this thoroughfare are all high and large. They are devoted to principal occupations of the highest grade.—Bankers, brokers, promissory of all sorts, have their offices on either side. You enter any one of them, and there is not so much show of business, as you would find in the offices on Wall Street. But the real work is done in rear rooms. In the front, you see nothing but a manager, and perhaps a clerk, who seem to be but little occupied. Strangers get strong impressions from this aspect of perfect ease and quiet. Behind this front room, there may be several hundred clerks, all of whom are driving their quills with incessant labor; they all devote their night hours a day to the most curious and brain-exhausting calculations, and yet they are all managed, guided, controlled by the single quiet gentleman, who, with his clerk or two in front, seem to have little or nothing in the world to do. They, together, in fact, become a complete whole, each necessary to one another. But every one represents a power. A single "no" or "yes" may be counted out or in, in millions. The single manager in his chair quietly touches a spring in his desk. A boy stops in and stands before him. Handing the boy a paper, he turns to his clerk and says a solitary word, and all is again silent. The boy by this time has disappeared; but the little paper he carries to the bank settles the fortune of some railroad in North or South America, or of some great speculation in Idaho, or China, or Japan. It is wonderful to see, what great events spring from what appear to be the most inconsiderable of causes. The signing of a single name, at the bottom of a slip of paper handed, without a word to one of these front-office gentlemen, as if at the remotest corners of the Globe by thousands or tens of thousands of the world's working population. You will see the same thing done, with a little more noise and clatter, in Wall street. But the Wall street operations, though large, are insignificant in comparison to these vaster ones performed here on the great minted street of London. Perhaps it is the magnitude of their operations that make these Lombard street capitalists so much slower in their movements, than the same sort of gentry in the United States. But it is certain, whatever may be the cause, that business is done with much greater rapidity in New York than it is here in London. There is a saying here, that the wheels of business is never so safe as when running in the same old rut; the rut is never left if they can possibly keep in it; and therefore, whoever comes to London, where money goes a begging for investment, hoping to spring a mine upon these slow English capitalists, and to bring them into a measure in what would be deemed reasonable time in other countries, will suffer an instructive disappointment. It is acknowledged here, that our friend Sherman obtained more immediate attention from this class of men, than any person who ever came to England.

We now bend our steps towards the right, in the direction of London Bridge; and, after making several turns, we found in front of the London Monument. It is known as "the monument"—because it is the highest in the world—and, because it commemorates an event never equalled in any clime or age. I refer to the great fire in London in 1666. It is said that the great conflagration, in the days of Nero, who "fiddled while Rome was burning," was greater in extent, than this great London fire. But Rome was a warmer clime, and there was not the suffering that was experienced here in this northern region. Hundreds of thousands of people were turned out of doors, without business, food or shelter; and before the city could be rebuilt, untold miseries were endured by the afflicted population. The fire began in the little street known as Pudding Lane, and it raged for four days, till nearly every building within the walls of the old town was laid in ashes. The monument, standing here before us, commemorates the sad event. The height of all the columns erected by the Romans was that of Antoninus, which measured, I believe, 172½ feet in height; and the base of the Antonine was 12½ feet in diameter. Noble as it was such a structure, I doubt the London monument is both loftier, and larger. The base is 15 feet in diameter, and the height, from the bottom of the base to the top of the urn, on the summit, is 202 feet. There is an idea contained in these measurements, which Sir Christopher Wren, its illustrious architect, has undertaken to transmit to eternity. The fire began, let it be remembered, in the little street, then as now known as Pudding Lane; and the height of the urn, which holds some of the ashes of the old city, marks the exact distance—202 feet—from the base of the monument to the spot in Pudding Lane where the great conflagration started.

The magnificent pillar is of the Doric order, severe, chaste and grand. No other style of architecture would have chimed so well with the solemnity of the mournful day. The base is hollow; several persons can stand together in it; and there is a flight of winding stairs, with 345 marble steps, that carry you from the bottom to the top. The marble of course is black, because it is in every way a monument of sorrow; it commemorates the nation's loss. Everything, in short, is in the exact spirit of the occasion that caused this pile to stand; and yet there is an air of elegance in the structure—a sort of memorial foretaste of the new city sure to rise out of the ashes of the old; for within a few hundred feet of this historical and funereal column, now stands the first building that sprang, phœnix-like, from the smouldering ruins of the infancy of London of a by-gone age.

The monument, therefore, is a sort of milestone marking the line of division between ancient and modern London, as well as between ancient and modern history, so far as the people of the Americas are concerned, and planting a new point of departure, another epoch, for the regenerated life of the lasting English-speaking world. Here I stood, then, for a hundred times, and gazed upon this lofty monument, but no inducement has ever prevailed upon me to climb to its top.

Retreating a few steps, then turning to the right, going along crowded, thoroughfares, we came to a noted fish-market, known the world over by the sphinx-like name of Billingsgate. In olden times, there was a gate, going down here to the bank of the Thames. There were steps descending to the river's brink. The fish-market of the ancient city was established here, near the river, because the trade in fish could not require the use of large quantities of fresh water, and then it was not far to carry the fish from the stream in which they had been caught. But about all such places, low people of every sort, in a low and illiterate age, would be sure to congregate. The language of these lowest classes is apt to be of a vile, profane, and indelicate character; and from this circumstance, the name of this locality so far as the English language goes, has become a synonym for everything vulgar and abusive. To say that a man uses billingsgate is to brand him with social infamy; and the place, judging from what one daily sees and hears among these men of fish, has not much since its earliest days in point of respectability. So, shunning both the talk and smell, we still hasten on!

Winding our dusty way along, we come next to the great fortress, situated directly on the bank of the River, and known as the Tower of London. This, taken all in all, is the most interesting locality in the great metropolis. The extent of it, within its walls, is nearly thirteen acres. Once within the walls, there used to be a deep moat full of water, passing entirely around the place from river-bank to river-bank. But the moat is now dry and about half filled, and the ground has been levelled off, smoothed, and transformed into a pleasant promenade for the families living within the fortress. The ground between the walls and moat, once very high and sharply cut down, has been graded and sloped off, set with trees, furnished with seats, and beautifully fitted up, for sitting down under the green shade of a hot summer's day; and the wives of the Tower officials seem to enjoy themselves upon the sweet, green grass, while their children romp on the levelled moat below. Within the moat, the variven, what curses would fill the sweet atmosphere of Britain, in memory of the royal wrongs here authorized and suffered! If departed spirits could revisit the places of their earthly residence, and living men could see them, what troops of injured men and women would issue, from these old battlements; drowning the noise of this great Babylon with their terrible reproaches, and not sparing the head of any wretched person, who might at any moment, by wearing the regalia of Great Britain, dare to represent the royal line that perpetrated such crimes against God, nature and humanity! But the walls and stones are speechless! Let Albert Edward, the young Prince of Wales, who may out-live his wretched way of life to wear the crown of his bad ancestors, thank all his stars at once, that the old Tower has not a tongue to tell the tale, which the English historians have patriotically covered up from the scrutiny of a better and braver generation than those, over which the Kings and Queens of England were such brutal, bloody, unmitigated tyrants.

But our journey is not completed, and we must travel forward. Turning to the right again, as we pass around the Tower, we come directly upon the far-famed London Docks, which, till those at Liverpool were built, were among the wonders of the modern world. A British poet tells us how trade was transacted here in London before these great Docks were built:

"Commerce broods o'er the public woe
The busy merchant, the black warehouse piles
Raised the strong cradle, each in the publicity crost
With foreign plenty; and thy stream, O Thames,
Clogs to its grand resort."

The Thames remains; the world's commerce is still here; but the business of the great commercial centre is done in a very different way. The streets, it is true, are choked, but it is with vehicles of every sort, distributing from these Docks the products of every country of the globe.

The reader will bear in mind that just as you pass round the Tower, the high land on which London stands begin rapidly to fall off, till it becomes a perfectly dead level just below the Mint; and this low, wet, level land continues all the way down the river as far as the city goes, and even down to the celebrated Isle of Dogs. This low land is like a wet prairie, and it lies but a foot or two above high-water mark. Nature has thus provided for cutting this whole area to any extent whatever, with canals; and the Isle of Dogs, indeed, has become an island by a natural canal cut by the overflowing of the tide; and a repetition of this process by artificial means is what has made the whole of this lower end of London the region of the London, India, and other Docks.

These Docks were thus rapidly made and are most magnificent in extent. Canals were cut from the river, wide and deep; the sides were laid up in solid rock; the surfaces between the canals were filled up and raised, so as to make them high, and hard, as well as dry. Streets have been built along these elevated embankments, and walls of great height and thickness divide the strips of land, skirting these canals from the fore-mentioned streets. Whenever a ship comes up the Thames, therefore, from any quarter of the globe, she need not stay out in the river; where she would be inaccessible to the public. She may wait the swelling of the tide and then float directly into one of these canals, come up to the side, and discharge her freight under cover within the vast warehouses that have risen up along these side deep, magnificent canals. The ships, in fact, thus ride directly into the city. You will see their lofty masts piercing up over the tops of the highest buildings. If you will get an elevated position, you will behold their pennons for miles and miles, floating in the breeze above the chimneys of the highest edifices. Low as this region of the city is, indeed, dirty and miserable as is the population, the thronging business, the towering masts, and the floating and flapping union-jacks and streamers, give to even East London a very gay and animated aspect.

We now enter the famous Shadwell Road, so-called, which, though called a road, is really a street, where the shops and stores are given up to commercial purposes connected directly with the river and the sea. There used to be here large iron and steel works, but these are now standing idle, their proprietors having found better conveniences in other parts of England. All this portion of the Metropolis is cut up into streets, lanes and alleys of an inferior grade, all of which are crowded with a low, dirty, drunken, miserable population. It was here, indeed, on this Shadwell Road, that a friend of mine and myself one day witnessed a very characteristic brawl between two women of the neighborhood. They were actually sparring directly in our line of walking, on the pavement, using their fists like men and their toughness as low women alone can use them. One woman was English, the other Welsh; and the Welsh woman accused the English woman with having robbed her of her husband. When we approached, they stood facing each other with drawn fists; they were both somewhat torn and scratched; their faces were considerably bruised and bloody; and it was altogether a most sickening sight. It was the work of jealousy wet down, or rather fired up, with rum. This scene gives the character of this part of London better than any language within my reach; and the reader will now learn with pleasure, that it is right here, amidst this wretched population, that our countryman, GEORGE PEABODY, has located one of his great lodging-houses for the benefit of the would-be sober and industrious poor.

We spend an hour or two in looking over this establishment. Four immense buildings stand together, at the four corners of an open square, offering suits of rooms at cheap rentals to such as wish to occupy them. But no reformatory measures are employed. Neither religion, nor science, nor philosophy is used to make the inmates, or the neighborhood, better than they were. This establishment is not popular. The rents are too high for the poor, and the buildings are not, so full as they were at first. Both among the occupants and the neighbors we found the place much spoken against; and I doubt whether the great charity will ever obtain to much popular success. Like Girard College in our country, it lacks the religious, or moral

STATE STRATEGY.

With a courage and audacity which would be admirable in a better cause, the Democracy of Maine are preparing for another hopeless campaign. Unmindful of the lessons of the past, and only welded more firmly to their idols by defeat, they still hope to profit by an imaginary division of the triumphant successful opponents, and are already numbering the recruits which are to bring them a victory. It is astonishing to note how stubbornly they resist the lessons of experience, and blindly depend upon the same state political trickery, which has over and over again been exposed, and rebuked.

The time has long since passed when the people could be led, through a desire to remedy some real or imaginary ill in their own political organization, to seek relief in the total abandonment of their principles, and, for the sake of a defensive progress, place their trust in a party whose policy was repugnant to their convictions. They have learned that those who denounce abuses do not always remedy them, and that the mere cry of change does not signify improvement. The public no longer depend for information upon a few mouthing demagogues, but read, and think, and judge for themselves. The argument that because the Hon. Hoo-Hoo has been extravagant or idle, it necessarily follows that the aspiring Roe will be the patron of economy and industry, is no longer accepted as infallible; and men have learned that the efficient mode of securing desired results, is not found in replacing those who have made unsatisfactory progress, by others who are pledged to make no progress at all, but to overthrow all that has been accomplished. As between two organizations, separated only by minor differences, such strategic moves have but little success; and it becomes absurd when adopted as an inducement to intelligent men to cross the gulf of treason, rebellion and death, which has yawned between the Republican and Democratic parties of to-day.

Those who are burdened by a Democratic rebellion, are promised relief through Democratic legislation; those who are opposed to Republican extravagance are invited to share in restoring that proverbial honesty and economy for which Democracy has been illustrated. The commerce destroyed by Democratic pirates, is to be revived by Democratic Congressmen; and under the general formula of spoliis sanbellos, all the ills of the present, are to be cured by the same agency, and the same policy which created them.

Such an appeal is simply worthy of its source. The people understand the actual value of these attributes; and a record of the political record of our State, will continue to heartily support the great principle which they have so often stamped with their unqualified approval. If defects are to be remedied or abuses corrected, they will intrust a party to do it, an organization whose ranks have emptied every element in our country, and whose history is the story of our National misfortunes.

LETTER FROM SEN. FOR MORRILL.

At the request of the gentlemen, we recently published the statement of Messrs. Snell and Metcalf of the Kennebec delegation, with reference to the attitude of Hon. J. G. Blaine during the late Senatorial contest. As that statement was deemed conclusive by parties claiming to be in the confidence of Senator Morrill, we copy the following letter from yesterday's Kennebec Journal:—

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER,
WASHINGTON, May 9, 1863.

HON. JAMES G. BLAINE:

My Dear Sir—I have only time to observe that certain parties in Maine have insinuated, if not directly charged, that in the Senatorial contest of 1857 you did not act in part of a true friend to me. The same thing has been verbally stated to me, but, as you are well aware, without any countenance from me. As we often said to you, I never had the slightest cause to doubt that you acted with fidelity and honor to me throughout that struggle. And there has not been a moment for the past sixteen years when the friendship and cordiality of our relations have suffered the slightest interruption. You are at liberty to make public use of this letter if you desire.

Your friend, very truly,
JOHN A. MORRILL.

THE MISSOURI RAILROAD DISASTER.

The following details of the terrible collision, near Eureka, Missouri, on Thursday last, have been received by telegraph:

The number killed outright is reported to be 20, most of whom were persons returning from Kansas to parts in Illinois and Ohio, where they resided. A young man, supposed to be C. E. Spaulding, of Boston, and William Taylor, of New York, being the only exceptions reported. The number of wounded is stated as 80, many of them seriously hurt, with arms and legs broken, or otherwise mutilated; but it was believed that all would recover. H. C. Stark, of Rhode Pack, Mass., and F. S. Briggs, of New York, were among the wounded. The people and physicians were on the ground promptly, and labored incessantly for the relief of the sufferers.

The train, bearing the bodies of the dead, arrived in St. Louis at 2 o'clock Friday morning, and the wounded were being tenderly cared for. The engineer of the passenger train says that he was running at an hour's rate at Eureka, but having 2½ minutes of the express train's time the conductor said go ahead. They suddenly descended one mile when he saw an express freight train dashing around the bluffs under full headway, only 600 yards off. Whistled down brakes, reversed, and gave her sand, but it was only to all to jump. In an instant the trains came together. Jackson was buried 30 feet below. Silence and serious hurt. The two engines met with a fearful crash; roared from the track and fell into shattered fragments. The baggage and two forward passenger cars of the express train, and the tender and first box cars of the freight train, were smashed into atoms, and splashed with the blood of poor human beings. The cars were shivered into long slivers; the truck irons twisted and bent, and the two engines thrown into an undistinguishable mass on the side of the track. And the whole deferred, is too deeply graven upon the American mind to be forgotten by the present generation. National pride should impel us in an effort to regain our lost position with the least possible dependence upon this hated, British despotism for its grand advantage.

The speaker thought our present position as a maritime nation unprofitable, unnecessary and positively disgraceful. The loss of our commerce was our misfortune; our inability to regain it, if we did fail, will be our fault. He always thought he was safe in saying that no one of the evidence taken by the committee would sustain the assertion that no leading cause was ever manufactured into Congress upon which there was such a unanimity of opinion as to those having a practical knowledge of the subject as was reference to the matter under discussion.

The testimony embraced the evidence of merchants, ship-owners and ship-builders taken in four of the commercial cities of the country, with letters from leading men of the same classes in all sections of the country, and also from American consuls at the principal commercial ports of the world, representing Republicans and Democrats, protectionists and free-traders.

The speaker stated the provisions of the bill under discussion were in brief: 1st, a drawback equivalent to the duties on all imported materials used in the construction of vessels built in the United States; 2d, when American material is used in the construction of iron vessels the payment of an amount equivalent to the duties; 3d, the withdrawal in bond of stores for consumption on voyages to foreign ports, and the payment of a small annual subsidy to vessels engaged in the foreign trade; 4th, a tax upon all tonnage engaged in the foreign trade.

The characteristic of these provisions were explained at some length. On the drawback feature, the speaker said there was no good reason why American vessels engaged in foreign trade should be required to pay duties on the materials used in their construction, and that a foreign shipbuilder, allowed to work up the same material, with foreign labor in a foreign country, and bring his vessel all finished into the United States free of duty. This single statement demonstrates the justice and the necessity for the application of the drawback principle; and the reason why still further relief should be afforded. And the same principle applied also to ship's stores. Here the American vessels should be placed on as favorable a footing as foreign vessels. In the provisions the bill places an American ship-builder and ship owner upon the same footing as the foreign owner and builder is placed by his Government, leaving him to contend only against the cost of transporting his materials, and the disadvantage of having to obtain them at a distance from the place where they are to be used, and the additional disadvantage of higher priced labor in constructing and sailing the vessels.

lor. This was an inducement for employing them in the first place—as between the two, but thought the heads of bureaus greatly preferred male clerks. He proceeded to argue that women were physically unable to perform the work of men with the same facility. If the voice of the women themselves would be taken on the question he had not a doubt that 75 per cent. of them would say "vote it down." This was because those of them who had reflected upon the matter anticipated with truth that if they were to be paid at the same rates with males, they would be turned out of the departments.

Mr. Morrill, of Maine, proposed to substitute for the amendment one to authorize heads of departments to appoint competent female clerks who shall be entitled to same pay as that received by all other clerks in the class to which they are appointed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.

A bill for pensions to the children of Commander Wilhams of the Oneida, having been reported on last night adversely, and laid on the table, Mr. Butler of Mass., entered a motion for reconsideration with the intention of calling it up at some future time.

Bills for the restoration of Capt. Dominick Lynch, Commander Robert Boyd, Lieut.-Commander C. H. Pendleton, Richard P. Leary and Joshua Bishop to active service in the navy, and for the relief of Jane B. Bishop, widow of the late Surgeon Wm. B. Bishop, and allowing Ensign Geo. H. Smith a share in the prizes captured by the Aries, were passed.

The bill directing the Secretary of State to sell $100,000 of U. S. bonds belonging to the Japanese indemnity fund, and to pay the proceeds to Commander Winslow and the officers and men of the Kearsarge engaged in the capture and destruction of the Alabama, $100,000 being the estimated value of the Alabama, and from which $80,000 that was previously paid is to be deducted) was explained, and defended by Mr. Hale of Me., but Mr. Maynard Tenn. made a point of order, which was sustained, that as the bill made the appropriation, it be considered in Com. of the Whole.

Mr. Schofield of Pa. appealed to Mr. Maynard to withdraw his point of order, and remarked that if at the time of the sinking of the Alabama any gentleman had made such a point the whole country would have pointed its finger in indignation at him.

Mr. Maynard ordered everything that Mr. Schofield said as to the gallantry of the act, and said his objection was not to recognizing it, but to the source from which the money was to come.

Mr. Hale withdrew the bill and amended it by requiring the money to be paid directly out of the Treasury.

Mr. Maynard said in that shape he would heartily support it.

Mr. Maynard of Ill. renewed the objection, saying he was opposed to rewarding men for doing their duty.

Mr. Hale then withdrew the bill absolutely.

A bill appropriating $325,000 in gold, to be paid to the British Government under the award of the Commissioners, to settle the claims of the Hudson Bay Company and Puget Sound Agricultural Company, was passed.

Mr. Hale will remodel the Kearsago bill, and again report it next Friday.

At the evening session the Tariff bill was taken up and discussed after which the House adjourned until Monday.

MRS. HELMBOLD,—I had been a sufferer for seven years from Female Weakness, and was reduced to a mere skeleton, so weak I could not walk across the room. I had tried many kinds of Medicines and several Physicians, and was relieved for a short time, but soon found myself as bad as before. I have tried your valuable Female Remedies, and experienced a cure, without the aid of Supporters, from three bottles.

Yours gratefully, MRS. O. T. WINNET.

CURE OF BLADDER AND KIDNEY AFFECTION OF LONG STANDING—STONE PASSED AND TO BE SEEN.

WESTPORT, Conn. Sept. 9, 1867.

H. T. HELMBOLD, Esq.,

DEAR SIR:—I commenced taking your Extract Buchu for a severe attack of Gravel, or Inflammation of the bladder, in February last. I had suffered for a long time with the disease, and had tried many remedies, but without success. I was induced to try your Buchu by seeing a statement of a case similar to mine, which had been cured by its use. I had taken about six bottles of your Extract Buchu, when I passed a stone about the size of a hickory nut, which relieved me entirely from pain, and the distressing symptoms which had attended the disease for years. I am now in the enjoyment of perfect health, and attribute all to the use of your Buchu. I have given it to others with the same happy results. You are at liberty to use my name as you think proper.

Yours truly, THOMAS J. BENNETT.

CURE OF KIDNEY AND BLADDER AFFECTION OF A PATIENT SEVENTY-EIGHT YEARS OF AGE.

Thanks to Mr. Helmbold.

GREENUP, Pa., March 11, 1867.

H. T. HELMBOLD, Esq.—I deem it a duty I owe to suffering humanity to give the benefit of my experience in the use of your valuable remedies. Having been afflicted for many years with Kidney Complaint, and consulting many eminent physicians, and trying many of the best advertised remedies of the day, without receiving any benefit, I was induced, by the advice of a friend, to purchase your Extract Buchu, which I commenced to use in the month of March, 1866. I had been confined to my bed for months, and was entirely helpless. I thought I commenced the use of your Buchu as a last resort, but I was encouraged to persevere, as I had spent so much money with no benefit. I had used two bottles when I was able to get out of bed, and by the expiration of four bottles, was entirely free from pain. I am now seventy-eight years old, and attribute my present health and ability to perform the labor of a young man entirely to the use of your valuable Buchu. I have recommended it to many others, and will continue to do so, as I have found in it a sure remedy for all diseases for which it is recommended. I am willing that you should publish this letter, if you think it will be of any benefit to suffering humanity.

Yours truly, JOHN MORGAN.

The result was [illegible] short time. I regard your Extract Buchu as [illegible] Kidney Complaint and all diseases of that kind. [illegible] Yours respectfully, [illegible]
